Why my studies?

Study orientation enables you to choose study programs you will gain practical experience and learn about academic career fields. You will have the opportunity to get to know universities, student life, and the demands of university studies. This will help you choose the right study format, degree program, and university location.

What is being done?

Their university orientation takes place either at school or outside of school (for example, at universities). It is organized by the school or individually, depending on their interests. They learn about the different fields of study and how to explore them. They participate in university orientation events (for example, open house days, information events, workshops). They use online self-assessment tools (for example, the self-exploration tool). They experience universities as extracurricular learning environments (for example, in the student laboratory). Particularly high-achieving students can obtain initial academic credits to complete at the university. Practical experience can change your perceptions about your studies, leading you to reconsider your initial decisions.

When will what happen?

Study orientation is an individual process throughout upper secondary education.

Who is involved?

Numerous stakeholders support and guide you in choosing a course of study:

Universities: Central Student Advisory Service (ZSB)
Employment Agency: Career guidance
School: Career guidance coordinator (StuBo), subject teachers
Parents

And my career choice passport?

The following documents will be filed in this part of the career choice passport:
Research results, worksheets, results of online self-assessment tools, records or notes on the topic of choosing a course of study.

Recommendation: File certificates of participation (for example, for university days, workshops on study orientation, projects) in "My Documents".
